Jordan Pledges U.S. Action On Arab Refugee Relief Abuses

Jordanian officials have told the staff of a U.S. Senate subcommittee investigating the condition of Palestinian refugees that they intend to correct one of the principal abuses in the refugee camps, says the New York Times writer, Richard Eder. This is the chaotic state of the rolls, which in turn entitle the refugees to assistance administered by the United Nations Relief and Works Agency. It is estimated that as many as 200,000 of the 450,000 refugee cards issued for Jordanian camps have fallen into the hands of merchants and other unproper users.

The assurance by Jordanian Cabinet members that the situation would be remedied was disclosed by George Abrams, staff director of the U.S. Senate Subcommittee on Refugees and Escapees. He and another staff member visited Jordan, Lebanon, and the United Arab Republic to look into the situation of the refugees, who were displaced during the establishment of Israel and who constitute one of the Middle East's knottiest problems.

Upon receiving the staff report, Senator Edward M. Kennedy, of Massachusetts, subcommittee chairman, issued a statement saying that he was examining the possibility of holding formal hearings on the subject.

The current investigation, the Senator said, is concerned not only with the question of the rolls and the general condition of the refugees but with the fact that some of them, while receiving United Nations assistance, are members of the Palestine Liberation Army, an extremist group, reports the New York Times, that has pledged to wipe out Israel and to fight alongside the Vietcong. He added:

"Some of the information we have been receiving concerning the Palestine Liberation Army and the utilization of U.N.R.W.A. supplies and facilities have been disturbing to members of Congress. Addition-

Head Of Fashion Institute Sees Need To Attract More High Quality Persons Into Merchandising

To Dr. Lawrence L. Jarvie, president of the Fashion Institute of Technology, in New York, education for retailing requires a special orientation on the part of the institution, the faculty, and the students.

"One of the major purposes of F.I.T.," he asserts, "is to raise the status of retailing as a profession and to imbue the 'shopkeeper' with a sense of pride and accomplishment as an integral part of a multi-billion-dollar industry."

As the top man at the Institute, where fashion merchandising and buying is the area with the heaviest concentration of students, Dr. Jarvie speaks with authority on retailing education and his views are considered extremely meaningful to the industry, says the New York Times writer, Leonard Sloane. Among the relatively few colleges that offer complete sequences in retailing, F.I.T. is one of the leaders.

"In the ever-increasing complexities of today's retail operation," Dr. Jarvie said in a recent interview, "the demand for highly prepared personnel far outstrips the supply.

"Machines tell a merchandise manager or buyer what the open-to-buy is. However, to a greater extent than in any other field, the human element must interpret and analyze this data."

When Dr. Jarvie, a genial Scottish-born educator, succeeded the late Lawrence L. Bethel at the helm of F.I.T. on January 1, 1966, he already was quite familiar with the role and goals of the two-year community college.

Immediately after the end of World War II, he served as Associate Commissioner of Education of New York State. Later he was named executive dean at the State University of New York, where he worked with local groups in developing two-year colleges.

From 1960 until 1962, Dr. Jarvie was president of the New York City Community College in Brooklyn. Prior to his appointment at the Institute, he was general superintendent of community education at Flint, Mich.

"Until the creation of F.I.T., very little had been done to meet the needs of New York's leading industry," he said, "and the little done was on a trade-school level. Today, after more than two decades, F.I.T. has channeled thousands of graduates into the industry."

An industrywide effort is required to attract more high-quality men and women into merchandising, according to Dr. Jarvie. The necessity has become increasingly urgent, says the New York Times, because of the growth of retailing facilities and hours of operation.

"A retail organization must have a program based on local action," Dr. Jarvie said. "It must begin to work in the high schools and interpret itself to the community."

The F.I.T. president suggested that merchants take a leaf from the book of the big industrial corporations in their recruitment policies. He added that this could be done on a joint basis, possibly through trade associations, since most retailers are not large enough to do it on their own, with the active assistance of his institution.

"What education ought to do is to look ahead," Dr. Jarvie believes. "We should be looking even farther ahead than the industry, since the industry is faced constantly with providing for a market day to day."

To provide the facilities for potential leaders in retailing — as well as in the apparel, textile and other fashion industries — F.I.T. is in the midst of a ten-year development plan.

Scheduled to be completed in 1972, this program envisions new physical facilities, additional research activities and a marked expansion of the institute's present full-time enrollment of 1,700 students.

The Fashion Institute of Technology, founded in 1944, awards the degree of Associate in Applied Science and is sponsored by the New York City Board of Education and the Educational Foundation of the Apparel Industry, says the New York Times. Its main building is a nine-story glass and aluminum structure at 227 West 27th Street, south of the garment district.

CAREER WOMAN WAS DISTINGUISHED PUBLISHER IN A MAN'S FIELD, HELPED HUSBAND TO FOUND FAMOUS COMPANY

Blanche Wolf Knopf, wife of Alfred A. Knopf, the publisher, and a figure in the publishing field in her own right, died in her home at 24 West 55th Street, New York, after a short illness. She was seventy-one years old.

Mrs. Knopf had just been given honorary doctoral degrees by two colleges, Adelphi University in Garden City; and Western College for Women in Oxford, Ohio; and was to receive the Constance Lindsay Skinner Award, says the New York Times, from the National Women's Book Association for "distinguished service to the book industry."

Since 1957 she had been president of Alfred A. Knopf, Inc., the publishing company that she helped her husband to found in 1915. Besides her husband, Mrs. Knopf leaves a son, Alfred Jr., of Westport, Conn., one of the partners of Atheneum Press; and three grandchildren.

Book publishing, for the most part, is a man's world. But in this world, Blanche Wolf Knopf was a feminine presence that commanded respect. She asked no dispensation for being a woman or a wife, and insisted on being known as Blanche W. Knopf, not Mrs. Alfred A.

Her alertness and perspicacity in recruiting writers for the company, and her driving energy as an executive contributed immensely to the success of the house of Knopf.

Although Mr. Knopf personified the publishing enterprise to the public, close associates were aware of Mrs. Knopf's true role. Robert Nathan, the novelist, a long-time friend of the couple, summed it up this way:

"Alfred is terrifically majestic. He and Blanche are like Jupiter and Juno. He is the ultimate, she the penultimate, but in her own right just as ultimate."

For fifty years Mrs. Knopf had virtually no other life but book publishing. "The world of books is the world I know. I would not change it for any other," she once said.

To the company she gave not only a sharp knowledge of belles lettres but also an acquired intimacy with typography, paper, ink, and printing. Mrs. Knopf, moreover, was responsible for the famous Borzoi imprint on Knopf books, says the New York Times. When it was devised in 1915 she was fond of the looks of borzois (Russian wolfhounds) and proposed that a drawing of one be used as a colophon.

"I bought a couple of them later and grew to despise them," she said a few years ago. "They were cowardly, stupid, disloyal and full of self-pity, and they kept running away. I wish I'd picked a better dog for our imprint."

Subsequently, Mrs. Knopf turned to Yorkshire terriers as pets.

The Knopfs initially made their reputation by publishing European authors and by presenting their books in attractive bindings and jackets. In the company's first years Mrs. Knopf was frequently in charge of the office while her husband traveled in search of authors.

W. H. Hudson's "Green Mansions" was one of their early ventures. Its success helped to establish the Borzoi imprint, which was strengthened in the nineteen-twenties by such writers as Thomas Mann, Sigrid Undset, Katherine Mansfield, Knut Hamsun, Willa Cather, H. L. Mencken and Clarence Day.

Starting in the thirties, Mrs. Knopf was often in Europe or South America in quest of authors. She was fluent in French and also spoke Italian and Spanish, and, by reason of her Austrian background, had a large measure of Continental charm. These attributes, plus a sound knowledge of letters, helped her to win writers for the Knopf list.

Among the British writers whom she signed up over the years were Hammond Innes, Elizabeth Bowen, Ivy Compton-Burnett, Muriel Spark, Angela Thirkell and Alan Sillitoe. André Gide was one of her French catches, as were Jules Romains, Jean-Paul Sartre, Albert Camus and Simone de Beauvoir.

In 1938 she persuaded Sigmund Freud to give Knopf his "Moses and Monotheism," a book that helped spread the psychoanalyst's fame in the United States, says the New York Times. Others of her European writers were Ilya Ehrenburg and Mikhail A. Sholokhov.

For her authors who wrote in foreign languages Mrs. Knopf arranged translations into English. Her impeccable supervision of this delicate task helped to win her the writers' gratitude and loyalty.

Mrs. Knopf's foreign list was peopled with intellectuals; but in the United States she was responsible for publishing authors of the hard-boiled school — Dashiell Hammett, James M. Cain and Raymond Chandler — as well as the gentle Mr. Nathan.

Mrs. Knopf was considered generous with authors — more so than her husband. Recently, for example, she paid Virgil Thomson, the composer and critic, $10,000 for his memoirs — a sizable advance in the publishing business.

Along with her financial liberality, she devoted many hours to her authors' personal problems. "Blanche was always wet-nursing her writers," a friend recalled, "seeing them through family crises, advising them on doctors and dentists, taking them to lunch and helping them meet people they wanted to know. She has a natural sensitivity to literary people, and she enjoyed taking some part in their lives."

Mrs. Knopf tended to be reticent about herself. "I don't think a lady published is any different from a man publisher," she told an interviewer with some asperity. "And I don't see anything interesting about her. I'll talk about my books and my authors, yes. But me? I should say not."

Her authors, however, felt that there was something special about her. Mr. Nathan, in a poem in her honor, called Mrs. Knopf the soul of the publishing company. Mr. Mann said that she "combines all the charm of the fair sex with an admirable energy and capacity in the realm of social and cultural activity."

"A man and his wife don't become Siamese twins, bent on identical pursuits and craving the same foods, friends and diversions," Mrs. Knopf remarked in an interview in 1933, says the New York Times. She might well have been describing her own marriage, for she and her husband were almost exact opposites in traits and tastes.

Mrs. Knopf was petite and chic; she was once plump, but for the last 35 years of her life weighed no more than 100 pounds. Her face was longish, eyes were gray-green beneath gently arched eyebrows; her hair was brown with a hint of red. She dressed very fashionably in Christian Dior creations. At the office she sometimes wore a ermine scarf over the shoulders of a smart frock. Mr. Knopf is a large man, addicted to purple shirts and loud neckwear.

Mrs. Knopf was widely known for her literary teas, at which she stimulated conversation with adroit questions.

Reared by French and German governesses, Mrs. Knopf was thoroughly sophisticated and courteous but quite unsentimental.

Mrs. Knopf often referred to herself as "the chairwoman of the firm," and there was no question of her full devotion to it. She worked at a carved mahogany desk in a red-carpeted office at 501 Madison Avenue, a brief walk from her apartment on West 55th Street. She was tireless in going over manuscripts, editing book jacket material and in keeping the Knopf editorial staff on its toes. Mrs. Knopf "sometimes works secretaries until they are exhausted and then remorsefully sends them on paid leave," according to a Geoffrey Hellman article on Mr. Knopf in 1948 in The New Yorker.

Even during her final years when she was ill and could scarcely see, she went regularly to the office and put in a workday that appalled her associates, says the New York Times. She refused medication most of the time lest it dull her mental acuity.

Mrs. Knopf was born in New York City in 1894, the daughter of Julius and Bertha Wolf. She attended the Gardner School there, but was largely privately educated, and her only degree before now was a Litt. D., conferred by Franklyn and Marshall College in 1962. She met Alfred Knopf about 1911, when he was an undergraduate at Columbia College, and encouraged him in his ambition to become a publisher. The Knopfs were married April 4, 1916.

Mrs. Knopf was honored by two foreign governments. She was named a Chevalier of the Legion of Honor in 1949, and later an officer, for her support of French letters she was, in 1950, made a Cavaleiro of the Brazilian National Order of the Southern Cross. Two years later she was promoted to the rank of officer.

JEWS OF RHODESIA

By Geoffrey Wigoder, of Jerusalem in the Congress Bi-Weekly

There are 5,500 Jews in Rhodesia. The first Jew to arrive there is reported to have been Daniel Kisch, a member of a well-known English family, who went there almost a century ago to advise King Lobengula. However, the beginning of the community is usually dated to 1894, when the Bulawayo congregation was organized.

By 1900 there were already 400 Jews in the country and their numbers increased steadily over the next 60 years, numbering over 7,000 in 1961. On a small scale there was an increasing settlement of Jews in Northern Rhodesia (now Zambia), especially along the Copperbelt. Their overall number, however, was never large and today is estimated at 800.

About a quarter of Rhodesian Jewry is Sephardi, most of them originating from the island of Rhodes. Many of them reached Rhodesia by way of the Belgian Congo. The Ashkenazim originate from Central and Eastern Europe, many having come as refugees from Germany in the 1930's. In addition, some went to Rhodesia from Britain and South Africa.

The Jewish community of Rhodesia is divided almost equally between Salisbury and Bulawayo. Once Livingstone had the largest number of Jews, but the community there has dwindled rapidly in recent times. Occupationally, there is a large concentration in commerce and industry, many being shopkeepers. They have played a useful role in developing light industries, particularly textiles. A considerable proportion are professionals, and a few are farmers.

The community is well organized. There is a Rhodesian Board of Deputies (affiliated with the World Jewish Congress), and an active Zionist Council to which various bodies are federated, notably Wizo.

Both Bulawayo and Salisbury have Orthodox and Reform congregations while Salisbury also has a Sephardi congregation. These between them conduct an efficient network of communal, educational and cultural organizations, including Jewish day schools and sports organizations (the latter sending a strong representation to the Maccabias in Israel).

Many Jews have played prominent roles in the development of the area. These include Sir Alfred Beit, the first

MONTREAL MEETINGS

★ ALLIED JEWISH ★

Community Services annual meeting heard the report of the president, Jacob M. Lowy, from which the following is condensed: The purpose of creating the Allied Jewish Community Services was the basic principle of the Jewish Welfare Federation movement: "A voluntary association of major elements and groups within the Jewish community, to carry on joint fund raising, central budgeting, and coordinated planning to serve every major Jewish need and responsibility, locally, nationally, in the State of Israel, and in the interest of Jews around the world." We work towards this aim to the best of our ability. Thanks to the responsible leadership of all agencies of AJCS we have achieved their finest cooperation in the implementation of coordinated planning. The new Jewish Convalescent Hospital building has been opened and is strictly what the name implies, a facility for convalescence thus easing the acute situation of hospitals, which can transfer some of their patients to this institution. The official opening is planned for June 26. A study was made of the need for additional beds for the chronically ill aged, and the Maimonides Hospital and Home for the Aged was authorized to submit estimates of the cost for construction to accommodate approximately 210 additional people. The extension of the Jewish General Hospital is well on the way. The Provincial Government has increased its grant for the new building expansion very considerably so that no capital fund deficit is anticipated for this extension. The Hospital is also planning construction of two other buildings, one to serve as a psychiatric clinic for outpatients, and the other as a medical research centre, with the funds to cover the cost of these two projects having been provided by private donors. The building of the Sir Mortimer Davis Branch of the YM-YWHA in Cote St. Luc is scheduled to be opened in June. Plans are also under way to acquire land for a day camp for one thousand children under administration of Neighbourhood House branch of the "Y". Progress has been made with respect to participation of the Jewish community in the proposed Federated Appeal of Greater Montreal. The AJCS, representing the Jewish community of Montreal, has been participating in the discussions on such an appeal for some time. Negotiations have reached the stage where the presidents of the six founding members made application for a Provincial Charter for Federated Appeal of Greater Montreal. With the approval of the Board of Trustees of AJCS, I had the privilege of co-signing this application. The by-laws were accepted by the founding members: Fédération des Oeuvres de Charité Canadiennes-Françaises, Combined Health Appeal, Canadian Red Cross Society, United Red Feather Services, Federation of Catholic Charities, Allied Jewish Community Services. When all formalities are completed preparations will begin for the first campaign of the Federated Appeal in the spring of 1968. The Jewish community must be mindful of its responsibility to its local health and welfare agencies; specific Jewish national and cultural agencies, overseas services so as to assure a continued adequate support which is essential for survival of Jewish identity in Canada, and also to maintain the 2,000 year old tradition of interdependence of all Jewish communities around the world. Jews are committed to the principle of being "our brothers' keepers", and have always assisted fellow-Jews in need, as well as helping to meet the needs of the local population. The Jewish hospitals in our city serve more than 40 per cent non-Jewish patients (Mount Sinai Hospital accommodating 70 per cent non-Jews) whilst our institutions maintain a specific Jewish character in providing kosher food, and other religious needs. We have the Jewish Public Library, Bnai Brith Hillel Foundation for Jewish University Students, the Canadian Jewish Congress, and the Seminary for Jewish Teachers. We must meet the needs of Jewish refugees and immigrants through the United Israel Appeal and contribute to the United Jewish Relief Agencies of Canada. For this reason the Jewish community will maintain its own annual campaign; the Combined Jewish Appeal for Allied Jewish Community Services and United Israel Appeal to continue support to overseas programs; specific local and national agencies not included in the Federated Appeal of Greater Montreal, and supplement where necessary for local agencies which may be included in the Federated Appeal. We feel that these needs must be met by the Jewish population. The Federated Appeal of Greater Montreal will make lump sum allocations to all its founding members, and allocations to the agencies will be made by each. AJCS will, therefore, retain its central role. The Federated Appeal of Greater Montreal will hold its campaign in the spring of every year, and that of the CJA for AJCS and UIA will be held in the fall as hitherto. There are a number of other major problems still facing us: The building up of AJCS Legacies and Endowment Fund to a more respectable level, proportionate to the size of the Jewish community of Montreal, and in line with other Jewish communities of similar size. The Jewish populations of Boston, Cleveland, Detroit, and Philadelphia have built up their legacies and endowment funds to the extent of ten million dollars and more for each city, and we have only a pitiful sum of around $750,000. We want to alert our Jewish citizens to think of the Jewish community when drawing up wills to provide for future generations and also for a possible rainy day. We must consider a joint capital fund campaign (apart from our annual maintenance campaign) to take care of capital needs of the near future and to liquidate the capital indebtedness of the various constituent agencies. We shall have to consider the question of Jewish education, and the responsibility of the Jewish community in this field. Canadian Jewish Congress, representing the Jewish community, has taken a very courageous stand in pressing for Government support of Jewish day schools. This is a very complicated matter, and we can not as yet predict when changes in Government policy may be expected. We shall have to widen our scope to include the study of Torah, and the education of our children in the Jewish tradition, if we are serious in our desire to survive as meaningful Jews.

Synagogue, will re-enact one of the most ancient ceremonies in the Jewish tradition on June 26, when the Kinyan Torah, or Torah Reception, will mark the handing over of two Torah scrolls which were donated by Shomrim Laboker Beth Yehudah Sharai Tifilah Synagogue to this new congregation in Dollard des Ormeaux. Acting president, Leon Levine, said, "This occasion will provide a rare opportunity for all members of the Jewish community at large to participate in a ceremony which few will ever witness again". Proceedings are based on the original handing down of the sacred Hebrew writings thousands of years ago on Mount Sinai. These events will be recalled in the ancient tunes and chants which will be recited and sung by Cantor Manuel Sands. The event will begin at 3:00 p.m., on the ground which has been obtained as the site for the proposed new Synagogue and School building, at 93 Westpark Boulevard, in Dollard des Ormeaux. The chairman, Michael Orlander, is arranging for grandstand seats. A garden party reception will follow the ceremonies.

What is the A. B. C. or Audit Bureau of Circulations, and what is its importance?

A. The A. B. C. is a voluntary association of major publishers, advertisers, national and local; and advertising agencies, working together to police circulation claims, and to translate them into facts.

Q. Why are circulation facts so important?
A. Circulation figures are the only honest basis on which print advertising is sold and purchased. Publishers base their prices for advertising on the amount of their circulation, and its quality. An advertiser buys circulation. A. B. C. circulation facts tell him the exact amount at any time.

Q. How does an advertiser know that this is really so?
A. A. B. C. publishers keep exact records of all circulation receipts for subscriptions and single copy sales. These can tell him, too, whether the circulation is sold without a premium, or with one, to induce payment; or whether the circulation is composed of membership in an organization; or whether it is sold on its merit alone. Was the subscription sold on a special rate? Was it paid by mail directly to the publisher, or to an agent? These are just some of the categories of subscription payments which are recorded.

Q. Why are some of these answers so important?
A. Sometimes these answers can tell an advertiser whether the subscriber needs to be coaxed into continuing, or starting. Are subscribers voluntarily buying the publication? Do they need a cut-rate or an added attraction to keep on?

Q. How are the figures checked?
A. The publisher checks his figures, and reports them twice a year to the head office of the A. B. C. These are audited once a year by travelling A. B. C. auditors, who check the names, the receipts, the printing invoices, the bank deposits, the paper used, the ink used, the postage receipts — all of these show the number of copies printed or mailed; and paid for. If an A. B. C. field auditor goes to work for a publication whose books he has audited within a year or so, there is an automatic re-audit by another auditor. An auditor does not audit the figures of any publication for more than two consecutive years.

Q. Does the A. B. C. allow past-due subscriptions?
A. The A. B. C. rules state that all subscriptions up for renewal must be paid within three months of the expiry date. The publisher must keep track of each one. These are considered paid, but not completely so, until paid in full, for the term to come.

Q. Are new subscriptions considered as paid?
A. Not until payment is received for the term in advance.

Q. What does this cost the publisher?
A. The publisher considers the membership as his investment to protect the investment of each advertiser. The publisher pays quarterly dues; the cost of the auditing done in his office, by the hour; and the cost of checking done further, at the A. B. C. head office. If further checking is needed, the publisher pays that cost, too. An auditor spends several days in the Canadian Jewish Review office each year.

Q. Are these the only costs?
A. The greatest cost to the publisher is to see that the records are kept in order and up to date. The Canadian Jewish Review addressograph plates are posted to show the date and method and amount of payment; and the date of the subscription, and the length of its term. A publication must carry on the address label all information that the auditor would need to guide him in checking. A publication which sells subscriptions on short-term, or with a premium, or in combination with other publications, for instance, will carry all that information and more, on the address label, coded in some way.

Q. What do A. B. C. reports and statements say about the Canadian Jewish Review?
A. They tell at a quick glance the provincial breakdown; the amount sold in a period; that the Canadian Jewish Review never sells a subscription on a premium; never with a cut rate; never jointly with another publication; never as part of membership in an organization.

The Canadian Jewish Review is sold on its own merits, and always has been. It has no affiliation with any organization.

A. B. C. reports and statements supply facts to advertisers. These facts need to be known for advertising money to be spent wisely and honestly.

A. B. C. publications can never guarantee results. They do guarantee readership.

The Canadian Jewish Review is in its 23rd year of supplying facts to advertisers, knowing to protect investments.

The Canadian Jewish Review is still the only publication reaching the general Jewish community in Canada, which can provide audited, paid, A. B. C. circulation facts and figures for the protection of such advertiser.

JEWISH NATIONAL FUND WORKERS CONSOLIDATE ISRAEL'S FRONTIERS UNDER ENEMY FIRE

By David Dayan, translated from Haaretz, Tel Aviv

All along Israel's borders, from the ridges of Rosh Haniqra, along the patrol track by-passing Tel-Dan and descending towards Karozim, through the Gilboa forests, through the border settlements along the frontier, through Beth Gavrin and along the Arava paths and the Gaza Strip, I saw the State's new security arm, the KKL. Part of the Fund's work in the border regions is directly connected with security. I saw KKL workers paving roads, reclaiming soil, and planting forests while being exposed to fire from enemy posts just facing them, and against which they were quite unprotected.

My most thrilling experience was meeting Nathan Carmi, a KKL tractor driver. It happened when I reached the patrol track circling Tel-Dan. This track, half an hour away from our northern frontier, had just been completed and he and other tractor drivers were engaged in soil reclamation. The tractors were busily uprooting the tangled bushes, followed by ploughs which were loosening boulders and clearing the upper layer of rocks and stones levelling the surface.

"What are you doing here?" I asked Nathan Carmi. He explained that they were extending the boundaries of the State reclaiming territory which legally and according to the map was ours. This territory touches the cultivated rim of Kibbutz Dan. By expanding the cultivated fields northwards, the settlement houses are removed some distance from the frontier, thus providing shelter from the open fire of the Syrians and their constant attempts at sabotage.

I saw the enemy post which looked like a harmless uncultivated field. The shooting would come from there to prevent marking the frontier line which had been lost in the thick undergrowth.

These tractor drivers do not work for high wages. They are sent by KKL to dangerous frontier areas, for some one has to do the work. Without boasting, Nathan Carmi was telling his story:

"All of us are married and have children, and if it's not me, it will be someone else. If none of us were willing to carry on, the Dan Settlement would pack up and move south, and what would happen then? The fact that we are helping gives us a feeling of satisfaction."

And then he went on to recount how, while the patrol track was being laid, he and his friends had been fired on without a warning. The bullets hit the sides of the tractor, the motor-grader, and one truck. The three drivers leapt into the River-Dan which flows south of the road. As the fire became more intense, increased by Syrian recoilless guns, two managed to swim away.

The third, who could not swim, escaped through the undergrowth and was wounded by shell splinters. The two who had safely reached the shore, returned to rescue him. Strong and accurate counter-fire from our side silenced the Syrian guns, and after a few minutes, the three men received instructions to resume work.

"You can imagine how we felt going back to the tractor, moving along the track again for hours on end, waiting every second to be fired upon. But we returned to work. The road is now a fact. The patrol are already using it. They are guarding the frontier, but we are conquering the land. And as the number of settlers in the frontier area increases, fewer soldiers will be needed here."

Then we asked Haim Oshterovitz, KKL inspector in this area, why the Fund had undertaken this heavy task. "Who else would do it?" he replied briefly. "The moment we finish our job, the Dan Settlement takes over the land, and its settlers bring their equipment right up to the border, as settlers have been doing for years in other sectors. The Israel Defense Army is constantly on the alert, maintaining security and carrying out its other duties which do not, however, include soil reclamation.

"We can neither pay inflated wages, nor do we have the authority to compel people to work in border regions," he went on. "Nevertheless, the work goes on."

And so, too, the work was being done in Ahuzar, situated in the Korazim region near Lake Kinnereth, where the enemy infiltrators used to hide under cover of the tangled reeds. A year ago, two members of the Nahal Settlement were murdered. However, as a result of the work by KKL, the settlers can now enjoy increased profits from the settlement's enlarged area.

Visiting the tractor drivers who were working very close to the Jordan river in an entirely exposed area, I saw, across the river, Syrian soldiers moving about, half-dressed, between the bunkers. They were able to observe our slightest movement. One never knew when a nervous trigger-happy soldier would come on duty, perhaps starting an incident which would merit six lines in the press. Somewhere in the area, frontier police were lurking only at a stone's throw from the enemy, and slightly behind them, the unarmored tractors were moving along noisily.

Shmulik, the tractor driver from Sedjera, talked in the same vein as Nathan Carmi. "I don't work here for the pay I get. I suppose I'm a bit of a chalutz (pioneer). I'm not particularly afraid of enemy fire. Anyone who is afraid must keep away from the frontiers. We must take risks and conquer every inch of land we can, otherwise we will have no frontier at all. The Syrian and I can see one another. They have even invited me to drink coffee with them, but I preferred to forego the pleasure . . ."

We returned in the car with that strange, uneasy feeling that we might be fired on at any moment. Work was in progress at Dan and Almagor. The tractors were blazing the trail for the patrol road descending from Dan, continuing through Shamir, Goren, and Gadot, the road hugging the most explosive frontier and where the enemy has put up the strongest fortifications.

This is the way a hitherto desolate border strip is being transformed into an area completely under our control.

mayor of Bulawayo; Sir Roy Welensky, the former Premier of the Central African Federation; and Dr. Alun Palley, the only white Opposition member in the Rhodesian parliament, who was recently excluded from its sittings.

The Jews of Rhodesia have always been Zionist-minded. The Bulawayo Hovevei-Zion Society was founded in 1898 and the first such society in Northern Rhodesia dates from 1912. The tradition has been maintained and has been also translated into liberal donations to Zionist funds.

The past decade has witnessed a certain emigration, some of it to Israel, but the great majority of Jews have shown no desire to leave. And so now they are faced, among other problems, with the wording of the loyal prayer in the synagogue service, should the Governor be commended for Divine guidance or should God be asked to confer wisdom on the "acting officer administering Government."

Their northern neighbors in Zambia are meanwhile facing no such divisions of conscience and have fitted in well with the new independent regime. One report states that the excellent relations with the government are in no small measure due to the respect of the Kaunda regime for the State of Israel, with which it tends to equate the Jewish community.

The existence of the Zambian Jewish community is officially recognized in the allocation of television and radio time for programs to mark the High Holidays and the government gave its approval to the establishment of a Zambian branch of the Central African Board of Deputies.

The other former partner of the Central African Federation, Nyasaland — now Malawi — has no Jewish community and on a recent visit there I came across no individual Jews, but was told that there are a few scattered families. Here, however, the name of Israel and work of Israelis are well known and appreciated — although, for the sake of clarity, I found myself in visiting some of the country schools being introduced as "a visitor from — Jesus-land."

Congress Central Region Statement On Toronto By-Law Against Incitement To Hatred In Parks

The Canadian Jewish Congress, Central Region, issued the following statement commenting on the By-law, which was recently passed by the City Council in Toronto by a vote of twelve to nine, setting a maximum fine of $300 for persons who use language or conduct in a park "which is likely to stir up hatred against any section of the public distinguished by color, race, religion, ethnic or national origin":

"The Canadian Jewish Congress on behalf of its affiliated groups and organizations welcomes the recent amendment to the City Parks By-law passed by City Council prohibiting conduct or language which is likely to stir up racial or religious hatred. We feel this is a strong safeguard against hate-mongering by those who, under the further amendment, will now be accorded permits to speak publicly in certain parks without having to obtain the prior sanction of City Council. It should be noted in this respect that the onus will not be on civic officials or City Council but will be placed squarely on the courts who will make their decision in the context of full judicial process.

"Subsection 9 of Section 13 of the By-law reads as follows: 'No person shall . . . indulge in boisterous, unseemly or unlawful conduct or use profane, indecent or abusive language in a City Park, or use language or engage in any form of conduct which is likely to stir up hatred against any section of the public distinguished by colour, race, religion, ethnic or national origin, in a City Park'.

"We know that we may look to the law enforcement agencies to enforce this By-law conscientiously and to take the appropriate steps should those who have the privilege of speaking engage in fomenting racial and religious hatred".

Several months ago, the Canadian Jewish Congress submitted a proposal to the Toronto City Council suggesting substantially the amendment which was eventually passed, that is that speakers be permitted to use the parks subject to a specific prohibition of incitement to racial and religious hatred. At the time City Council was planning to restore the granting of permits to all applicants. Congress suggested that it be done subject to the above condition.

JEWISH TRADITION AND POLITICAL ACTION

By Rabbi Richard J. Israel, director Bnai Brith Hillel Foundation, Yale University, in the Jewish Frontier. Rabbi Israel is still out on bail after his arrest as participant in the August, 1963, Albany, Georgia, "Prayer Pilgrimage", while publicly reading a Psalm.

Now that I have tried to present a context within which one can act, I should like to take just a moment to tell you about the process of action itself. For those of you who are ready to act, first of all, fight for things that matter.

Secondly, choose areas in which you can be effective; that is, every problem can be reduced to a size that you can comprehend, and do something about. If you are interested in changing foreign policy or fighting for peace, I say that you are wasting your time. If you are interested in getting one Congressman to change his vote on one piece of legislation, than you are engaged in something that makes sense. Occasionally, pick areas where you have some chance of success. They will support you through many long, lean periods. In 1950, I was with a group of students who picketed two segregated music schools in Cincinnati. After one week apiece of picketing, each of the schools capitulated and Negro students were admitted.

We were then ready to take on the world. For a starter, we went to the local amusement park to protest the fact that swimming privileges were segregated. We barely escaped with our lives. (I will always remember my indignation when they began calling the whites in the group "dirty Jews." After all, we didn't look Jewish. How did they know we all were? Later on I became more sophisticated.)

Without the earlier experience, I think the sheer physical fright induced by the second would have kept me away from the barricades for a very long time.

Next, understand your opponents. Recognize that each is a man like you with virtues and vices along with strengths and vanities. Try to imagine how you would behave if you owned his property, held his political office, or had his job. If you can do this, you stand a much better chance of being able to communicate effectively.

If you treat a man as if he were a living personification of evil, the chances are that he is going to behave that way. If you treat him like a man, with motivations no less complex than your own, he may respond to you like a man.

In Georgia, I found that it was much easier to be arrested than it was to confront face to face the people who opposed what I was trying to stand for. It was probably safer, too. I would suspect that it was also less effective. But then I was there trying to fight the system. I now think that I should have been there trying to talk to the people.

Your greatest opposition may come from your families. They are worried about what implications your actions will have for your future. They will be worried about your life and safety. Be gentle with them. Recognize that their concerns and worries are real and cannot be dismissed as trivial.

Even outside of your family circle, you are not going to find sympathy in all quarters. The most infuriating of all will not be those who oppose you, but those who write you off as an immature idealist. I am personally very much in favor of three-button-suit, clean-shaven demonstrations. But, remember, whatever you do, you are going to be labeled a beatnick.

I was in jail with an Episcopal priest who had an ulcer and who, after twenty-four hours of fasting, just had to have Maalox and requested some from the jailer. One of the local papers reported the next day that among those arrested were junkies who couldn't live without their stuff.

To the timid I must say that though I point out that there will be those who will both fight you and ignore you, there will also be some marvelous people whom you will be very proud to know, who will support you. There will be many more who will think you are a bit extreme, but on the side of the angels anyway.

Remember, that the people who express themselves have more power than the people who do not. The activists constantly worry the establishment that is always concerned about new trends and public opinion.

The biggest changes that will result from any action you take will take place within you. You will change your own life in ways which you may not expect. If you are not very careful, some of the changes may be for the worse.

The demonstrator and the direct-actionist is in grave danger of feeling like a hero with nothing but contempt for those who do not at once follow his one right away. Such a person does a rather poor job of sanctifying the name of the Lord among the multitudes. He becomes an ineffective leader and, worse, he serves as a very poor model for those who might be interested in his cause.

Rabbi Yitshak of Vorki once took his sons to see his teacher, Rabbi Bunam, who gave each of them a glass of bock beer and asked them what it was. The older boy said: "I don't know." Menachem Mendel, the younger, was asked and said: "It is bitter and good." Rabbi Bunam then turned to Menachem Mendel and said, "This one will become a great leader in Israel." If you have the stamina and the stomach, if you can take tradition and challenge it, if you can look at the world about you and force it to face up to the tradition, you will find the draught bitter and good.

TAKING THE MEASURE OF THE CENSUS IS NOT ONLY UNNECESSARY, BUT EVEN DETRIMENTAL

By W. Gunther Plaut, Rabbi of Holy Blossom Temple, in Toronto, in the Toronto Globe and Mail

The time for census takers and enumerators is here again. Nice persons ring the doorbell and ask mostly irrelevant questions. They say that taking a census is a necessary instrument of public policy. I wonder. To me, such activity is not only unnecessary, but even detrimental.

My aversion is in all likelihood inherited, culturally speaking. My forebears had an almost superstitious fear of numbering people. Besides, it generally boded ill; it either meant recruitment for involuntary servitude or, in more recent days, for shipment to extermination camps.

In biblical days census taking was believed to be the privilege of God. It had occurred twice during the desert wanderings of the people and that was enough. When David tried it again a few hundred years later — doubtlessly in order to impress additional men into his army — there were disastrous results, ascribed by popular imagination to divine interference.

One can still find old Jews who when counting a group will pretend that they are not really doing so and count as follows: not one, not two, not three, not four and so forth. Their reasons for doing so are probably unclear to them or are plainly superstitious, yet I venture to say that this odd way of doing-and-not-doing represents a residual resistance to the pervasive habit of substituting numbers for people. The enumerator may not know it, but he helps in the accelerating process of depersonalizing our society.

My television or radio set tells me that 345 North Vietnamese and 73 Americans have been killed. The next day and the day after, I hear similar figures. The newscaster pronounces them with great solemnity and an air of serious fatefulness as if thereby he had said a single thing about the real meaning of war. Yet his statistics only hide the agony of families torn apart and children orphaned, the loss of men's hope, the final futility of fighting.

The safety council predicts that over the holiday weekend there will be 65 deaths on the highways. The public interest which these projections arouse lies largely in the area of statistics and has little to do with people. After the day's deadly dance is over we want to know mainly how good the council's prediction had been. We have but a marginal concern for the misery and tragedy; just numbers, that's all we need to know — except, of course, when the tragedy is close to home.

There are many who can tell you that the new sculpture in Nathan Phillips Square will cost $100,000, but relatively few will be able to name the artist or the theme of the sculpture. There are others who know that Judy LaMarsh wants to spend $6,000,000 on a painting — but what painting and by what artist is not likely to pique the public's curiosity.

A new building goes up and only two questions are asked: how high and how much? The architecture is secondary, its usefulness uninteresting.

What do we want to know about a man? How old he is and how much he makes, or perhaps, if our interest stretches further, how many children he has and how often he has been married. Figures, numbers, these circumscribe the essence of a human being.

A woman (especially a young one) is described by three measurements — as if thereby we had said anything about her real beauty, her true character, or that attraction which does not speak from rounded curves but from the sparkle of the soul. (For this reason I am opposed to any and all beauty contests, for they tend to pervert our appreciation of human beings and further corrupt our all too superficial culture.)

Athletics is no longer primarily connected with the exuberance of physical exercise and the healthy joy of friendly competition; it has become a matter of data, records, numbers. The success of a track and field meet is measured by the attendance of spectators and the number of records broken.

They used to say, "It does not matter whether you win or lose, but how you play the game." Today, it is no longer a matter of how you play, but only whether you win.

Bring a hockey fan and loving to see a hard fought match, I am intrigued by the clash of will and skill. I shall always be wryly amused, however, by the pious insistence with which I am informed that Bobby Hull shot a goal at 12 minutes 33 seconds of the second period. Unless such preciseness is important to bettors, I am at a loss to see what difference it would make whether the goal was scored at 12:33 or 12:34.

I would be far more interested to learn that the tally was achieved through a graceful manoeuvre and a powerful shot that caught the goalie by surprise. But we will not be treated to these unnecessary additions. Give us the time on the clock, the number, the figure, and everyone pretends that we have touched on life's essence.

Then there is the student in class. He too is neatly pigeon-holed with rank and mark. The IBM machine can grade him and therefore we imagine that we have all the necessary information about him. What need is there to know about his drive, his motivation, his goals, his dreams, his true capacity? What need is there to know the hardships he has to overcome, his conquest of a physical or psychological handicap or a difficult situation at home? No need for this: the machine has told us his grades, has marked him superior, inferior, or mediocre. It has, of course, told us nothing about the student as a human being.

We become so wrapped up in our mania for measurement that even our spiritual enterprise is now expressed in statistics. How many members does the church or synagogue have? How many seats does it hold? And what salary is the minister paid?

If we know these facts we are sure we know what needs to be known — for who cares about the life of the spirit, the social involvement of the people, the realization of their professed ideals? Is it not a matter of civic pride that the steeple is the highest (or widest or lowest) in the whole town? Besides, what other church has a clergyman so young and measuring 6'4"?

Already we are well on the way to becoming mere figures in the statistician's log book. We have credit card numbers and social security numbers, draft numbers and bank numbers. Soon the spectre of George Orwell's 1984 will be upon us and we will either be Comrade or Citizen 734-45893.

The social system under which we live will then make little difference; for we will all be depersonalized and the values which once seemed to matter will have been neatly stacked in electronic computers. No wonder that when a man goes to jail and is deprived of his freedom and thereby of an essential part of his humanity, he is given a number. No wonder the Nazis with their uncanny insight into the ultimate process of dehumanization robbed their concentration camp victims of their names and stamped numbers on their arms.

Our pre-occupation with statistics leads us into a multitude of dead-end streets. A man must retire at 65 — just when he reaches the very pinnacle of his mental powers and the greatest depth of his wisdom. Precisely then society throws him on the slag heap of the useless.

Canada has only a few million inhabitants, not unlike the Jewish people who are spread around the world. Measured quantitatively they are small entities in the sea of humanity's billions. But what do mere numbers say about the significance of Canada or the importance of Judaism? Nothing, for human stature and value are not measured by figures.

Somewhere in our civilization there must be those who share the ancient biblical sense of rebellion against the numbering of people, who want to know a man by name and character, by potential and grace, and not by statistics.

I am sure I would have liked the enumerator as a person though I do not like the job he was sent to do. Unfortunately, I was not at home when he came, else I might have started my anti-statistical campaign with him. Suppose the next time the government feels the urge to count us it would not find enough volunteers to take on the task? That might be the blessed end of it.

JORDAN PLEDGES U.S. ACTION

ally, the problem of rectifying the rolls and elimination of fairly flagrant abuses seem to have continued over the years, particularly in Jordan."

A State Department spokesman said the United States had on several occasions, including one he described as recent, asked United Nations officials to withhold assistance from refugees in the Army. The spokesman estimated that they numbered 8,000 to 12,000.

Mr. Abrams, who spoke with members of government in the three Arab countries, said he had looked into the question of the Liberation Army but he declined to discuss his findings.

He said he had found interest in all three countries in alleviating the condition of the refugees.

"In Jordan, where the problem is especially serious," he said, "clear representations were made that steps would be undertaken to begin correcting abuses, particularly in the widespread trafficking of refugee cards among merchants".

Refugee cards, which entitle the holders to food, are sold to merchants and other unauthorized persons by refugees who leave the camps or take jobs, or by relatives of refugees who die.

The most serious consequence of this, since the number of cards is restricted, is that children who are born in the camps cannot be issued them, says the New York Times. The number of these is estimated as high as 200,000.
